BACKGROUND

You have always known your place in the Empire - it was serving in the military. You have held a sword in your hand almost since the time you first walked, and you anticipate following in the footsteps of your father, who is a general in the army. Despite his fame, however, you have chosen not to accept his patronage. You have distinguished yourself in battle and have won both recognition, advancement in rank, and a position within the ranks of those who guard the Celestial City itself. By skill alone you demonstrated your worthiness to be trained in the prestigious Shan Dan Dao Te martial arts academy, and by skill alone you have earned your promotions. You anticipate that your rise will continue in the future.

Yesterday you received a summons to appear before an official of the Celestial Court for an assignment in the service of the Jade Empire. You were instructed to pack for an extended journey and be ready to depart immediately after your appearance. To someone with your background and training this could mean only that you were being sent on an extended assignment, either alone or with others - possibly even an independent command of your own! Whatever the task you intend to perform your duties to the best of your abilities, not just for your own sake but because you really believe in the Empire.

You are a serious, no nonsense sort of person, particularly when you are on the job. You hold yourself to the highest standards possible, and expect anyone under your command to act the same way. Furthermore, you have little patience with those who don't - you know what people are capable of (or at least believe you do) and anyone who is giving less than 110% while under your command will likely feel your ire.
